Sheree Friedman's interiors are transitional in style and inviting in sensibility. Clockwise from opposite, top: Friedman teamed with Michael Wolniewicz Custom Furniture Design to create a recreation room complete with built-in bookshelves, entertainment center and bench; built-in bookshelves line the perimeter of a comfortable family room; an Asian chest is paired with a striking decorative hanging lamp to dress up a hallway vignette; a custom desk with tile backsplash offers a clean-lined, tranquil vibe; and the dining area of a spacious kitchen boasts dark-stained cabinetry and a sleek, wooden dining table.

As Sheree Friedman sees it, an interior designer must consider the functionality of space, lifestyle and the environment in order to reach a balance between a client's quality of life, work needs and social outlets. Friedman, principal of Sheree Friedman Interiors, LLC, strives to create beautiful, tranquil and well-designed homes with comfortable furniture, inviting colors and personal touches that communicate a sense of individuality. Along with an appreciation for nature, these are Friedman's guiding principles. "As a designer, I must solve problems, enhance lifestyles and increase the value and function of one's home or office for a project to be successful," she says.

According to Friedman, communication and trust between a client and designer is critical. When beginning a new project, she conducts meetings to gather information, share ideas and fully educate a client on what to expect throughout the design process.

Sheree Friedman's work has been featured in publications such as Home & Design, The Washington Post and Traditional Home. Friedman participated in The Washington Design Center's 2003 and 2005 Design Houses; a room she designed for a Washington Design Center Design House was featured on "Fox Morning News."
